

Insights

Steven Perlstein and Beau Barnes Examine the SEC's Cybersecurity Enforcement Landscape for 2018

November 13, 2017

Publication: Family Wealth Report

A number of recent U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) actions point toward more robust enforcement of cybersecurity rules in the coming year. Amid a year of high-profile cyber breaches, the agency has taken definitive steps to enable increased enforcement. Steven Perlstein — who litigates matters related to data security, particularly with regard to civil remedies available to prevent the widespread dissemination of proprietary information, and who often represents clients in white-collar criminal defense matters and regulatory investigations — and government enforcement defense and investigations lawyer Beau Barnes discuss some of the SEC's recent actions, what they mean and defensive measures companies can take.

To read the Family Wealth Report article, "SEC Tightens Screws On Cyber-Breaches; How To Prepare For Increased Risk," please email contact.us@kobrekim.com.