India Business Law Journal named Kobre & Kim one of 25 “Firms to Watch” globally for cases with a nexus to India, one of the world’s fastest-growing economies. The firm was recognized for its unique model and work in India, including its representation of NTT DoCoMo in the enforcement of a US $1.2 billion London Court of International Arbitration award against Indian conglomerate Tata Sons.

Vasu Muthyala, who defends clients in India against U.S. government regulatory enforcement, was also recommended as a leading lawyer. Srijoy Das, a partner at Archer & Angell, told the editors that, “despite the highly sensitive nature of the work and immense pressure that goes with it, Kobre & Kim was able to provide sensible, practical advice which was of immense help to clients,” referring to a cross-border investigation that involving Indian parties.

India Business Law Journal bases its rankings on an analysis of more than 600 law firms from every continent that have documented deals and cases with an Indian element in the past 12 months.
