Kobre & Kim Hosts Second Annual Center for Trial Advocacy Event Featuring Nationally Recognized Trial Lawyers Roy Black and Matthew Menchel

April 19, 2012

Kobre & Kim's Center for Trial Advocacy (CTA) held its second annual event highlighting nationally recognized trial lawyers Roy Black of Black, Srebnick, Kornspan & Stumpf P.A. and Matthew Menchel of Kobre & Kim's Miami office. The event featured Mr. Black, who recreated portions of his closing argument from the high-profile, six-week long tax evasion trial of Indycar driver and three-time Indy 500 champion Helio Castroneves. Immediately following Mr. Black's demonstration, the audience (comprising individuals in attendance live and participants via a webinar) participated in a Q&A session during which Mr. Black and Mr. Menchel provided tips from their own extensive trial experience.

The CTA was established by Kobre & Kim in 2011 to provide a forum for experienced trial lawyers to exchange trial ideas and best practices. The panels comprise prominent lawyers who are experts in the field of trial advocacy. Each CTA program is specifically tailored to prepare lawyers for some of the obstacles they may face throughout the various phases of a trial. The next CTA event will take place in spring 2013.
