ICE'S "RE-ENTRY" POLICY

ICE's "re-entry" policy is a critical component of its enforcement strategy. It allows ICE to identify and remove individuals who have been previously removed from the United States and who attempt to re-enter the country without proper authorization.

ICE's "re-entry" policy has been a significant focus of enforcement since 2017. The policy is designed to deter individuals from attempting to re-enter the United States after being removed, and to identify those who do so for removal.

Konanykhin, a prominent immigration attorney, has been a significant focus of enforcement since 1999. Konanykhin's work has been instrumental in challenging ICE's "re-entry" policy and securing the release of individuals who have been previously removed from the United States and who attempt to re-enter the country without proper authorization.
